Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences

The Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences invites people open to new educational experience. At present the Institute of International Relations, Department of Military History and the Institute of Education Studies has an extensive offer. The choice of the courses corresponds with the requirements of current job market as well as the specifics of the Academy which originates from military traditions. Therefore it is possible to combine maritime and military issues and create exceptional character of the subjects taught. As recent years have shown graduates of FHSS are perceived on the job market as people possessing professional knowledge and a wide range of practical skills.

The best idea to gain professional knowledge is to complete a post-graduate course offered in specialties such as: pedagogy-based career preparation, education for security, personal and classified data protection in International relations and political marketing. The post-graduate courses are a perfect supplement with a very wide didactic offer of FHSS which is constantly evolving following the market requirements.

Profile of the Faculty

The educational offer of the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences has interdisciplinary character. This is the result of broad areas of research conducted by its workers.

The Institute of International Relations focuses on issues related to countries in the contemporary political system, European integration, maritime regionalization and political reflection.

Department of Military History deals with issues related to Pomerania as the subject of historical investigations, Baltic politics, navy and naval thought in history of Poland as well as military-based changes in Poland with special attention placed on the military significance of Pomerania.

The Institute of Education Studies deals with the issues related to intercultural education, education for the needs of the labor market, military education as well as upbringing and technology assisted educational systems. Students get involved in apprenticeship in schools, kindergarten and social assistance centers which helps them gain practical knowledge and skills in the field of education.

Courses

Students acquire the most up to date and desirable knowledge which will always be in demand. The course of international relations covers the following specialties, at first and second cycle: self-government in the European Union countries, Europe in international relations, united Europe, world regions, educational and social politics, special and police forces and security in the contemporary world. In these specialties the emphasis is placed on the issues of security and the European continent, which makes them especially attractive to people who plan to deal with military and non-military threats, terrorism, asymmetric conflicts and many others related to the most current issues in international relations. Graduates of these specialties can find jobs in EU administration, institutions and agencies as well as in other European organizations. Equally attractive are specialties in the pedagogy course, such as education for defense, social work, education for security, primary education and resocialization pedagogy. They are response to the growing demand for qualified workers possessing both pedagogical competences and orientation in the issues of security, corrective and social work. Such combination seems to be highly attractive, which is proven by huge interest in this course of study.
